

Turtles Skit

Cast: Customer, Shopkeeper

Setting: Pet Shop

Customers: We'd like to buy some turtles.

Shopkeepers: Well, here are three of the only 9 turtles we have left -- they sell very well out here but turtle shipments are few and far between.

Customers: Gee, thanks! Just the kind we were looking for, too!

Later, customers comes in with dead turtles and are a little distraught.

Customers: Look! they're dead already! How old were they?

Shopkeepers: Here, here. Let me see. Hmm. Look, having pets die on customers on the first day they buy them is bad for business, so here's are new ones. No charge.

Customers: Thank you! That's so gracious of you.

Later, customers come in with dead turtles and are more distraught.

Customers: Are you sure these turtles are okay? These one died on us too!

Shopkeepers: Let us see. Hmm. Well, here are the last of my turtles, and though we won't get another shipment for a while, you can have them for free.

Customers: You are the nicest store owners we know. Thank you so much!

Later, customers come in with dead turtles and are hysterical and crying.

Customers: What are you trying to do to us? These died too!

Shopkeepers: Let us see. This is bugging us too. Say. They all have scratches on the shells. Why? What were you doing with them?

Customers: (Sniffing) Well, we were only trying to give our cars turtle waxes!