

Railroad Tracks Skit

A number of persons are standing on a railroad track arguing over what the animal that has been run over on the track is....

#1: It's a deer

#2: Nope, it's bear

#3: I think it might have been an elk! I saw its white keister!

#4: I think it could have been a huge possum! (Everyone looks at this person as if they are totally dumbfounded!)

#1: I'm sure it's a deer

#2: Uh-uh... look there. It's a bear for sure . . .

#3: That right there looks like the elk's heinie!

#4: I think it's a huge possum, and it's just playing dead and squished to smithereens! (Everyone looks at this person again in a very dumbfounded way!)

As this goes on continuously, a group of other kids form a line, all holding on to each other's hips and form a train. They then come chugging along the track towards the guys arguing about the animal (lots of chug-chug noises here).

When they get to the guys arguing they run them over (Okay, make it look like they were hit and run over . . . be careful.) and then, from the first guys in the train line you hear...

Train #1: What'd ya think we hit?

Train #2: It was a deer

Train #3: But it looked like a bear. . .

Train #4: I think it was an elk. That looks like a elk's gluteus maximus we just ran over!

Train #5: I think it could have been a huge possum.

Then everyone on the train stops and sings (and maybe with the formerly dead animals) to the tune of Oh Christmas Tree . . . O Tannenbaum:

Oh Possum Pete, Oh Possum Pete
There's nothing left but hair and feet
Oh Possum Pete, Oh Possum Pete
There's nothing left but hair and feet
You thought you'd beat that train across
Now you look like a pile of moss.
Oh Possum Pete, Oh Possum Pete
There's nothing left but hair and feet
